Hello

From Woodstock to a man on the moon, the summer of 1969 was a tumultuous and eventful time, and amongst these many momentous events, Gulbenkian opened its doors for the first time.

It’s been my privilege to get to know the many artists, alumni and audiences who have made Gulbenkian such a special space over these last 50 years, and together we’ve curated a 50 Years Festival to celebrate these Gulbenkian stories.

The festival includes music gigs from the 'old and new' Canterbury Sounds, performances by the University’s Musical Theatre Society and T24, plus a day of activities hosted by our own ART31 group of young, local people.

We’d love you to join us and celebrate with us this June. Tickets are now on sale and you can find out more here: www.thegulbenkian.co.uk/50-years

We are also using this anniversary to highlight the great work we do by, with and for children and young people (see page 16). If you’ve visited us over the years and have been impacted by our work, then we’d be honoured if you’d consider supporting us this summer, as every penny we raise will go towards giving more young people in Kent access to amazing, life-changing experiences through the arts. A gift of £50 will enable you to become a Gulbenkian 50 supporter, and a gift of £250 or more will allow you to have your name on a seat in our newly-refurbished theatre.

You can find out more about what we do and donate here: www.thegulbenkian.co.uk/donate.

I hope to welcome you here this summer!

I hope to welcome you here this summer!

A Thousand Faces

A heresy to burn a book, but acceptable to burn a woman. Bold dance-theatre by Amina Khayyam using abhinaya, a component of the classical Indian dance – Kathak, to subvert imagery of Bollywood beauty and Hollywood glamour and explore the objectification of women in indiscriminate abuse and violence, particularly acid attacks.

Amina Khayyam, renowned for her abhinaya, has fused this with European experimental forms of mime theatre movements to give A Thousand Faces a unique and innovative feel.

The performance features live music – cello, tabla and vocals.

#JeSuis

Through a diversity of dance, music and cultures, these seven dancers from Turkey deliver a tribute to all the people, whether they are in prison, a refugee camp, or in a house behind closed curtains, whose stories have not yet been ‘hashtagged’ and where their freedom of movement, their speech, religion or liberty remains at stake.

#JeSuis was born from the belief that our ability to speak out and stand together will see us through to brighter times.

TRIBE//
Still I Rise

TRIBE/s debut work Still I Rise is a call to arms, a defiant and uplifting work danced by a female ensemble. Raw and emotive dance is combined with Victoria Fox’s powerful yet articulate movement style. The work channels the resilient, unapologetic nature of Maya Angelou’s poem. It’s unflinching, relentless hope for the human spirit binds this visceral dance work together. From pounding beats to stirring classical arias the music drives the dancers onwards. Falling down, gathering up...we rise.
